S&P 500 Update

After seven days of sideways action, the S&P 500 had alleviated its overbought conditions by the end of the week.

The ability to overcome substantial overbought conditions without a price retracement points to a significantly strong market.

Thursday, the index tested its weak 7/8 number at 4544.16.

Friday, the market used the Fibonacci 7/8 number to springboard higher. The +.59% advance closed near the day's high, taking out Thursday's reversal day with above-average volume. Closing above the reversal day is another indication of the market's incredible strength.

Two days of solid price advance and substantial accumulation have the S&P 500 approaching its significant July High at 4607.07.

Closing above the July high on above-average volume will complete a cup-with-handle base that started at the bear market high in January 2022. The ability to break out of the cup-with-handle base will point to significantly higher prices and Fibonacci targets of 4732.89 and 4818.62.

The Fibonacci number at 4607.07 is substantial, and the ability to break it will act as another test of the market's current strength.
